

drainage and there is sufficient timber to add the necessary touch of natural beauty so desirable in a location of this kind.

Winding roads of gravel surface reach to every part of the tract and on both sides of a parkway and lake now in the making.

This tract was subdivided just before the world war and every lot was sold because of the attractive location and the reasonable price of the lots. But the war and its aftermath prevented the great majority from improving their property, so there are today very few homes in this tract.

Those of us who live in Bloomfield

